seemed scarcely to have begun when he ended.

"I know this to be true that for twenty years afterward I never even mentioned the fact to anybody that I heard Lir.coln's speech. In those twenty years it wasn't much talked of, but as you know now, everybody reads it."

Horace White, who reported the Lincoln-Douglas debates, delivered an address in Chicago at the recent Lincoln celebration, and thus described Mr. Lincoln's oratory:

"Lincoln had a high-pitched falsetto voice that recembled the pipe of a boatswain's whistle, and he often had to stop for repairs in the middle of a sentence. Both mind and body worked more slowly than in Douglas' case. No one ever caught Douglas napping, and he was quick as a flash in answering questions and making his interrupters fee! their inferiority."

Yet much of Lincoln's fame rests upon his addresses, while only for students of history does Douglas' eloquence mr
